Rum History

It all started with arrack; when sugar cane was first introduced in 1639, arrack became the primary source of revenue of Mauritius. However, the increasing taxes on alcoholic drinks were affecting the people. Illegal distillation reached a peak, along with its harm and misdeeds. In order to deal with fraud, the 18th and 19th bills were voted, prohibiting the sale of poor-quality rum. Since the British soldiers fighting in the World War were significant gin and rum consumers, Mauritian distilleries started producing more and more alcohol to help providing the soldiers at front. Finally, in the early 2000's, the Government voted a bill which allowed a controlled distillation of quality rums. The Mauritian rum produced from molasses or cane juice made a reputation of its own and now competes with the very best worldwide.

Built in the style of the traditional rum shops found across the island, the Rum Shed captures the essence of a bygone era, with tavern-like windows and doors as well as delightfully old-school décor. Its walls are lined with wood planks from old fishing boats as tables and chairs are made out of bicycle rims. The bar offers the largest collection of rums in Mauritius, with over 250 types from 36 different countries, as well as, an impressive selection of rum-based cocktails.

Also enhanced by a selection of finest wines around the world to paired with the cuisine proposed by the chef.
